A WATER LILY.

A Gentleman's Sad Experience Youth.

Written for the BACKSWORD NEWS.

Down where the water lilies grow
My fair companion, Ruth and I,
When playing near a gentle stream,
And watching the bubbles passing by,
We clasped our hands and laughed with glee
As they would burst and come and go.
The white foam kissed the mossy brink,
Like little fishes of the lake.
How sweet and cool beneath that shade,
Where the weeping willows weep,
And as the breeze would stir my brow
I calmly fell asleep.
Not long I slept, for soon there came,
A voice, a calling scream,
I woke and scarcely could believe,
And vain would have it all a dream.
I called aloud, "Where are you Ruth?"
"Ah! you have hidden somewhere!"
When I sought I caught in the cold, clear stream
A gleam of her golden hair.
With haste I sprang in the water,
And carried her gently to shore,
But the light had gone from her eyes,
I would play with her there no more.
She smiled as I laid her
Bright tresses in my hand,
And clung to the water lily,
She held her head white hand.
Too far she had strayed from the rock,
Where the lily hid its face,
And she felt the water's embrace,
She felt the water's embrace.

PICKING UP A VEST.

A Woman's Idea of Handling The Garment.

Did you ever see a woman handle a man's vest?

And have you noticed with that sublime sweet consciousness of knowledge she invariably picks it up by the bottom and spills all its contents on the floor?

"Mary," said Major DeHaven, as he passed slowly into his home the other evening, "it is infernally hot, and if you don't mind I'll just take off my coat and vest and see if I can't get cool."

The Major removed those precious garments and laid them across the foot of the bed.

Have you noticed that a married man always throws his clothing across the foot of the bed, making it a sort of hat and coat rack? And you have also probably noticed that within two minutes thereafter his wife is engaged in removing his garments to a more proper place.

Then the trouble begins.

The Major's vest was just a common piece of white goods, built for summer use, but it fairly bristled with pens, pencils, paper knives, note books, silver money and a watch and chain. Every pocket was stuffed with the Major's implements of hell, and everything so adjusted that he could produce any article desired in the twinkling of an eye.

"Major," said Mrs. DeHaven, "the bed is no place for your coat and vest. I'll get them on a chair."

She picked up the vest carefully in her left hand. Everything in it rattled and careened, but stayed. The Major shouted:

"Confound it, Mary, don't pick that vest up by the bottom. You'll spill everything out. Carry it by the top if you must monkey with it."

"Major," said the good woman, "I guess I know my business. And I guess I'm too old and been married too long not to know how to manage clothing."

She still held the vest in her left hand, but she strengthened its precarious precariousity a trifle by pressing in against herself with her right hand. A woman always does that. She started for the door.

The Major held his breath in anticipation of the wreck which he knew was coming, yet dared not attempt to prevent it.

It is a woman's idea that a vest should always be doubled across the neck of a chair. Where she got it the Lord only knows, but it seems part of her mission on earth to insist upon this point.

The Major was no exception to the rule. She rushed across the room and threw the Major's vest across the back of a chair.

There was a wreck.

Lead pencils, knives, note-books, watch and chain and every conceivable thing that a man can carry in his vest pockets flew hither and thither in every direction.

The Major was furious. He arose in his wrath and made remarks he was sorry for afterwards. Then he went to work to restore the contents. He crawled under the bed for his small change, fished the lead pencil from under the dresser, and got his note-book out of the grate.

"Mary," said he, at last, "I have told you so often not to throw my vest over a chair. Now, you see what trouble it makes."

"No trouble at all, Major," responded the good woman, "but I didn't take long to pick the things up again. The object lesson was entirely lost."

Now Try This.

It will cost nothing and will surely do you good. If you have a Cough, Cold, or any trouble with Throat, Chest or Lungs, Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, is guaranteed to give relief, or money will be paid back. Sufferers from La Grippe found it just the thing and under its use had a speedy and perfect recovery. Try a sample bottle at once and learn for yourself just how good a thing it is. Trial bottles free at G. Short's Drug Store. Large size 50c. and $1.

The Cause of Present Low Prices of Cotton.

An Arkansas correspondent, whose neighbors are becoming excited about recent cotton, wants to know if the McKinley tariff has had anything to do with the present low prices. Of course it has. Since their goods have to pay a heavier tax at the New York Custom House, before getting to American consumers, how can the British spinners and weavers afford to pay as much for their raw cotton as they did under the lower tariff? The more McKinley's tariff is looked into, the more clearly it is seen to be a scheme for fattening a few larvae in the "Industrial States" while starving honest producers in other parts of the country.

That Terrible Cough.

In the morning, hurried or difficult breathing, rising phlegm, tightness in the chest, quickened pulse, chilliness in the evening or sweats at night, all any of these things are the first stages of consumption. Dr. Acker's English Cough Remedy will cure these fearful symptoms and is sold under a positive guarantee by G. W. Short, Cloverport, Ky., and Witt & Meador, Harlinsburg, Ky.

Change of address. When ordering please state the old address as well as the new address. Always give positive guarantee, and state if new paper is not received regularly, no duty is.

The Difference.

Raw cotton is 25 per cent. cheaper now than it was a year or two ago, and cotton goods are at least 5 per cent. dearer. The difference both ways is all on account of McKinley, whose really big bears down the price of cotton and the down-stitch mill, and leaves a chance to earn an extra profit of 25 per cent. upon their cotton goods.—St. Louis Republic.

The Distinguished Artist Mme. Sarah Bernhardt.

The coming engagement of this great actress in Louisville, at the Auditorium, October 10-20th, is absorbing all the interest in the dramatic line in that city and vicinity. Louisville has had many attractions, but none to surpass "the Divine Sarah." The best authority in this country on dramatic matters, said of Sarah Bernhardt—"Bernhardt's performances thus far during this tour, have been appreciably more spirited, not none the less subtle, than any given previously by her. 'La Toesca' is indisputably, a drama of horrors, but it should be borne in mind that Sarah Bernhardt is for Bernhardt, knowing that her genius would make the horrors entrancing. The wonderful achievements of this great actress, are especially a marvel to those of her own profession who observe her acting with rapt and evidently puzzled interest, as do all who witness the wonderful effects she produces, not understanding the power which is called forth by her accompaniment. Facial impressions seem to be quite as important to her as either her marvelous delineative poses and gestures, or the feebly rapid and melodious speech. Such a player must be born with a combination of mental and physical qualifications as no acquirements of art can create, as the dramatic power and facility possessed by Sarah Bernhardt. She is now at the best of her career."

Those who expect to attend this great event, should make some preparations or accommodations. Col. Robert Logan of the Willard Hotel, said, if orders continued to come in for rooms for the Bernhardt engagement, that the house would be filled from top to bottom.

The sale of seats for the engagement will begin September 7th, at the Auditorium Box Office, 422 4th Avenue. Any one desiring information, should write to James B. Camp, Business Manager P. O. Box 63, Louisville, Ky., and get a handsome prospectus.

Rev. James Vernon's Lecture.

A good sized and appreciative audience listened to Rev. James Vernon, of Henderson, last Thursday evening, while he told them of his trip to Europe, Egypt and the Holy Land.

Touching briefly upon the points of interest by the way, he devoted the main portion of his lecture to a description of Egypt and his twenty-eight days sojourn in Palestine. Besides crowding into his lecture much interesting and valuable description, he had the happy faculty of enlivening his story with humorous illustrations and strengthening it with thoughtful observations. To crowd into one evening's entertainment an account of so extended a journey, requires no small degree of tact. In this the Rev. Mr. Vernon has succeeded admirably, and has given a lecture which is both pleasing and instructive.

Mrs. Jane Richardson's Awful Fate.
A special agent, which was carrying Judge Richard of Louisville, over the Richmond, Nicholasville, Irvine and Beattyville railroad, ran down Mrs. Jane Richardson and her three little girls on a high bridge, near Nicholasville, last Monday afternoon. Mrs. Richardson saw the engine, but not in time to leave the bridge, and she gathered her little ones about her at the outside edge of the bridge and waited for the engine. She and two children were thrown from the bridge, and the mother was killed, while the two children were mortally wounded. A third child was left untouched on the bridge.
